Curbing the Sugar Rush
Tackling oral diseases and other noncommunicable diseases through a unified approach

Solemnizing levels of global sugar consumption represents a significant oral health and noncommunicable disease (NCD) challenge. Without targeted investment in widespread preventative interventions the burden of oral diseases and other NCDs will continue to accelerate unabated.

Learn from a panel of health experts, including high-level health advocates and civil society activists, on how the oral health and NCD community can leverage cross-cutting interventions and strategies to reduce sugar consumption.
